

Mainstreaming the Greening: Sustainable Procurement in the Philippines

THURSDAY
10 FEBRUARY 2022
14:00 – 16:00 (MANILA TIME)

BACKGROUND

Sustainable development and transitioning towards a greener economy rely on a holistic cycle that reduces the impact of economic activities on the environment, with a focus on enforcing greener life-cycle of products, building market demand for sustainable products and production technologies, and shifting consumer choices to make informed decisions towards sustainability. Given the government's authority to enforce policies as well as the mechanism to trigger market demand, it is seen as an essential driver in influencing consumption of environment-friendly products. Likewise, as a large consumer of goods and services, the public sector has the potential to influence manufacturers and service providers towards the use of sustainable raw materials and practices in their business operations. Establishing and maintaining this virtuous loop is an essential role for the government.

In 2020, the House of Representatives passed the House Bill No. 6954 or the Green Public Procurement Act (GPPA). Anchored on the governing principles of GPRA, the GPPA intends to build and promote sustainable practices and informed decision-making across the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of the Philippine government by incorporating environmental, economic, and social considerations in government procurement processes through the Green Public Procurement (GPP) Program implemented by the Government Public Procurement Board (GPPB). Pursuing this is consistent with the country's commitment to the United Nations' 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

Green initiatives in both public and private sectors are key in achieving SDG12 goals. In this webinar, we highlight the efforts done by the government in Green Public Procurement, and we showcase how one company in the private sector is incorporating green efforts in their management decisions. These programs ensure adherence to sustainable consumption and production (SCP) with the end goal of shifting towards a circular economy.

WHO THIS WEBINAR IS FOR

- Key management decision makers from public and private sectors who are keen on promoting and implementing green initiatives
- Academics who teach/advocate for CSR, sustainable business, and the like
- Scholarly researchers in the field of sustainable consumption and production

OBJECTIVES

- To create a conversation in implementing green procurement in the Philippines
- To share results of Philippines GPP country status report
